Advance Review Copy

Advance Praise for A Necessary Presence

"Clare Bryden's gentle, precise poems embody the kind of stillness where real seeing becomes possible, a 'reweaving', as she says, of what is given to us. 'Never get used to this', she reminds her writing self. It is a good summary of the quiet awakeness to which this collection points us."
— Dr Rowan Williams, former Archbishop of Canterbury

Advance Review Copy

CLARE BRYDEN

A Necessary Presence

LIFEBELT
POETRY

Advance Review Copy

Advance Review Copy

A Necessary Presence

Advance Review Copy

Clare Bryden is a writer and web developer based in Exeter, UK. Her interests are wide-ranging, primarily the relationships with self, neighbour, the rest of the natural world, and with God. Her dream is to write light into the world.
clarebryden.co.uk

Praise for A Necessary Presence

"Clare Bryden's gentle, precise poems embody the kind of stillness where real seeing becomes possible—a 'reweaving', as she says, of what is given to us. 'Never get used to this,' she reminds her writing self. It is a good summary of the quiet awakeness to which this collection points us."
— Dr Rowan Williams, former Archbishop of Canterbury

Advance Review Copy

CLARE BRYDEN

A Necessary Presence

Lifebelt Poetry

Advance Review Copy

Copyright © Clare Bryden, 2026

ISBN 13: 978-1-0654911-0-1

A CIP record for the book is available from the British Library.

First published in 2026 by Lifebelt Press,
a trading name of Exeter Sustainable Enterprises Ltd, Exeter, UK.
Reprinted with amendments, November 2026.

lifebeltpress.co.uk

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted in any form or by any means without the prior written permission of the publisher, except for brief quotations in reviews.
Requests to publish work from this book must be sent to Lifebelt Press.
Clare Bryden has asserted her moral right to be identified as the author of this work under Section 77 of the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988.

Typeset in EB Garamond, licensed under the SIL Open Font License 1.1.
Cover design and photographs by Clare Bryden.

Advance Review Copy

to the Sisters at Tymawr Convent with immense gratitude

All we had to do was be there,
Learn to be still, and let ourselves be prayed through.

— Martin Olsson "Compline at St James"

Advance Review Copy

Advance Review Copy

THE POEMS

I
Malling Abbey, May 2011 3
All are welcome 4
Kilpeck Church 5
Tymawr Chapel speaks 6
Blythburgh 8
On his Cross 9
Many-storied 10

II
Rewilding 13
Language Lessons in the Garden of Eden 14
Corff Crist 15
The Spinner 16
The Plunge 17
When a butterfly prophesies 19
White Brook 20

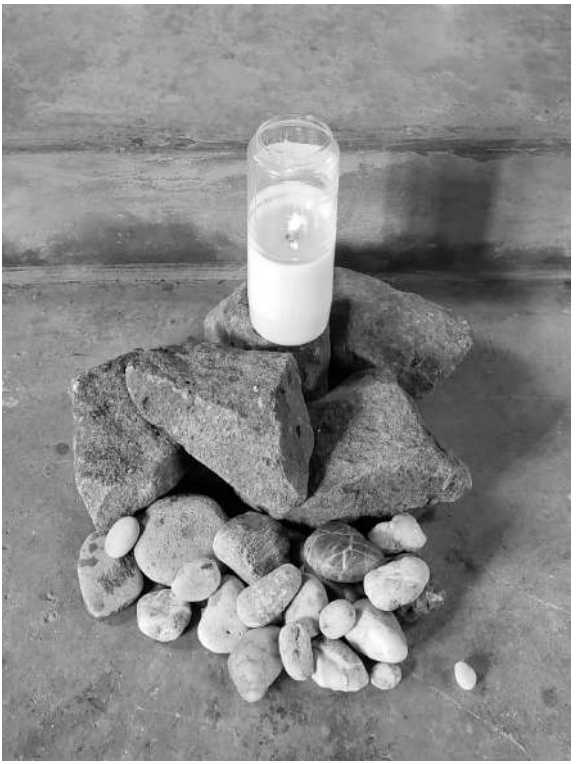

III
Knit together 23
St Columba consults the Shipping Forecast 24
Easter Sunday, 2026 25
Just is 26
On visiting friends in Loughborough 27
Some of our conversations 28
Heartwood 29

The next thing 33

ENDNOTES 34
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS 36

Advance Review Copy

Advance Review Copy

I

Advance Review Copy

Advance Review Copy

Malling Abbey, May 2011

I remember solitude.
The Sisters had their work.
The others in our group had gone to visit Rochester Cathedral.

I'd opted out, preferring to be on my knees pulling weeds in the hard, dry kitchen garden.

Later I found a place to pray,
a stool on one side of the cloister, part glassed in, part open to the square —

cobbles, grass, stone flags, central pool, a gently rippling spring with waterlily leaves ready as open hands to receive the drifting spray.

I stayed as long as presence in the silence — pool, spring, lilies — my soul filling and overflowing in a calling to this way —

not community but contemplation — templing with — attending to an interior garden, my own hortus conclusus.

Advance Review Copy

All are welcome

for everyone who knocks, the door will be opened — Matthew 7.8

I do not need my own key
I do not need to know

a secret code that opens sesame there is no code, no key

this door will not be pried
however hard I try to frame my way

the host so sweetly hovers close inside

waits ready at my softest tap to fling it wide and crack a wider smile

welcome me wholeheartedly to lamplit halls and lively company

where worldly cares and sorrows fall away and I abide a while

Advance Review Copy

Kilpeck Church

for Mrs Browning

When I described Kilpeck Church to you — my parents having dragged twelve-year-old me on a visit —
I doubt I had much to say about decoding ecclesiastical architecture.

I might have mentioned the carved Norman arch above the south door, but skipped its likely Celtic origins, the corbel of a pig with a man in its mouth, the Pugin glass, the sheela na gig and dedications to St Mary and St David.

I suppose that most of what I had to say concerned the what I'd felt inside, because you gave me something that approached a side eye, your slant perceiving my encounter with the Holy. I'm reading from a later place of faith — though now I wonder whether twelve-year-old me stood one foot in that faith in Kilpeck nave. A necessary presence, traced in glass and stone, in me these forty years. Back or forth in time — which way do echoes carry?

Advance Review Copy

Tymawr Chapel speaks

I

Place your hand upon these walls, hewn haphazard
into a house of prayer.

Trace the Stations of the Cross — each beam and upright scratched into fourteen rough, grey stones.

Put your finger in the marks of the masons, working burnt-rose blocks
fit for an everlasting altar.

II

On the Eucharistic altar are two lit candles, and three and three tealights set in a stream of leaves on the sanctuary step.

But the one thing that is needful is the faintest light kept burning by the sacrament, the blessing day and night

holding all the darkness in the world at bay.

Advance Review Copy

III

At five o'clock
the Chapel bell is rung
to call the community to Evening Prayer.

Thirty-three times,
the years of our Lord's days.

Above the altar
the crucified One listens closely as the final stroke sounds and fades away,

is silent and lingers.

IV

Yes, my Lord and my God. Come, scratch your sign on the walls of my rocky heart.

Advance Review Copy

Blythburgh

for Eleanor

There is the place where I would stand, outstretched hand resting on a column of pure, saturated prayer. For once not worrying about following another's rhythm, for you were waiting where the light streaming through the clerestory windows was the natural element of angels poised to swan-dive. There outstretched, for a moment I could breathe underwater.

Advance Review Copy

On his Cross

CROSSPIECE — CHRONOS

How long has he been hanging there, eyes askance, as though he cannot bear to look on us?

A hundred years? A thousand? Two?
He'll have much more to bear before we're through with him.

UPRIGHT — KAIROS

What do crucifixes show?
The dying or the death?

Did his eyes close when the lids gave in to gravity on breathing out his final breath?

Has he shuttered them against the pain?

Or are they piercing down and right where the penitent thief and I forever beg him to Remember us!

to say Today
you will be with me in Paradise?

Advance Review Copy

Many-storied

Stepping forward to receive the host,
I lift my hands and trip to see these aide-memoires scribbled in black biro — blots not quite scrubbed away.

The left hand, lying awkwardly in right, prods at my conscience — that call I meant to make — and traps my attention — this shopping list.
Too late to change, I commit.

The minister takes a wafer wrought in crosses, raises it and speaks — the body of Christ — the Word, then lays it gently in my waiting hands, rewritten.

Advance Review Copy

II

Advance Review Copy

Advance Review Copy

Rewilding

Last moon I dreamt a pine marten approached my patio door,
stretched up, paws on glass, and peered in on me. Imagine opening the door a crack and she flows across my threshold, streams and supples and spirals me up and round and round and down and

up and round and round and down and finally comes to rest in my arms, a part of me — she makes no sound but I understand that I am owned.

Now at prayer, I watch my owner skitter giddily in circles, causing chaos scattering the candles, causing chaos for the joy of it, all of a sudden pause —

one foot in the air —
and rush my knees to nuzzle at my nose, jump to my head, muss my hair and down to snuggle briefly in my collarbone.

The winter has been long, but now the land is welcoming the pine marten.
She and her kits, absent for a century,
are playing in the broadleaf woods of Devon.

Advance Review Copy

Language Lessons in the Garden of Eden

> whatever the man called each living creature, that was its name
> — Genesis 2.19

God has been educating Adam in all the languages of Eden naming for him

the heavens and the earth
light and dark
water and sky
herb and tree
sun, moon and stars

Now in the cool of the evening
Adam takes his turn

God points and Adam thinks Hebrew aryeh, Aramaic aryā
Greek léōn, Latin leo, Arabic asad
Welsh llew, English lion

So Adam names the creatures one by one nāḥāsh ḥivyā óphis serpēns ḥayyah sarff serpent keves immerā amnós agnus
ḥamal oen lamb

Advance Review Copy

Corff Crist

we are a larger group today
a wider arc around the altar the faintest scent of baking bread voices mingle softly in three-part harmony

the Body of Christ — Corff Crist the Word was made flesh yn y Gymraeg, hefyd

a blessing please
the Blood of Christ — Gwaed Crist
        the taste of wine lingers on my lips

Advance Review Copy

The Spinner

for the community at Tymawr

One hundred years the Spinner has been weaving a fragile web in this consecrated place.
In love, she has been gently giving of her body to form the spokes of lace she tethers firmly to the old oak tree and threads that hold and bind the space between. In time each spoke will fray — the Spinner weaves in old and new, then waits — content forever to perfect the unity of now. Again, the storm cloud shakes its strength. Again, the Spinner patiently renews — this my body this my body — the breaks.

The web endures the long night through — the Spinner lights its load of morning dew.

Advance Review Copy

The Plunge

for Katharine

However well-prepared, the plunge into a Tymawr May-time overwhelms.
So much spring is calling for attention — how the wildflower fields full of clover and oxeye, sorrel and speedwell and tiny sky-blue butterflies

are already well above my knees onto which I wish to fall — give praise — and how each morning and evening the moles shovel up the dark red soil in fresh new earthworks along the paths — and how the younger trees, bearing the weight of all their green, are bowing down to greet upwelling undergrowth — and how loud it all is! The dawn chorus joys the whole day through,

two pale purple rhododendrons thrum

Advance Review Copy

with white-bottomed bumble bees, and the drumming rain — even the rain — burnishes the coming sun. And I want to cry

Never get used to this! Never forget to stop and smell the roses, these and those roses, those roses over by the house and those and those and those roses.

Stop and smell every single rose.
Spend every waking hour at it!

Advance Review Copy

When a butterfly prophesies

Where had you been sleeping, that the rising November heat awakened you before the end of the Eucharistic Prayer?

We receive the bread and wine standing in a half-moon. You pilipala in the window, cut crazy capers on the carpet, abruptly fold. On a knife-edge — unfold — fold — wearily blink your peacock eyes.

Is this a sanctuary or an asylum?
Are you trying to show us light when you so desperately batter at the glass?

Advance Review Copy

White Brook

A gap in the branches —
I glance aside — arrested step — the water in the White Brook has stopped short

to quiver in the sun,
giddy with joy,
elbowing mossy rocks.

If I gaze long enough
on the skittering silver mirror,
I slip right through straight to the quick.

How could I not bow?

Advance Review Copy

III

Advance Review Copy

Advance Review Copy

Knit together

for Morwenna

God settles in for the evening,
radio on and latest project to hand:
four double-pointed size 13 needles and a basket of 5-ply yarn.

Your hands made me and fashioned me — you clothed me with skin and flesh and knit me together with bones and sinews.

There's a myth that the home of a drowned fisherman could be told by his gansey.

When I wash up on the shore of the river of life,
I am counting on God to recognise my pattern.

Advance Review Copy

St Columba consults the Shipping Forecast

St Columba keeps his ear to the long wave.
Shannon. Rockall. Malin. As the dove flies

he is praying for a kindly breath set southerly and fair. And may it sweep all chaos from the waters before his curragh of sticks and skin.

Hebrides. Bailey. Fair Isle.
When marauding gales swoop from the north and vision clouds,

let the body be a fastness.

Advance Review Copy

Easter Sunday, 2026

Some bloke is lying on the path along the field ploughed for wildflowers.

He has pulled his hoodie down over his eyes to shield them from the Easter afternoon.

The last heat in the turf ebbs
into unforgiving ground,

but he can still make out the sun,
even through his eyelids, hood and hand,

and listen to his daughter playing.
She fits snugly in the furrow next to him

taking a worm's eye view —
I hear the earth tastes good.

In a little while he will rise,
reach for his daughter's hand,

brush off the soil
and swing her onto his shoulders.

Advance Review Copy

Just is

In a split second of clarity before the Blessed Sacrament

in the tiny transfigurations of an apple, hand, or leaf

in a good friend's sudden burst of laughter (it was a brilliant wordplay)

in a gap in the clouds

in the twitch of a smile
crinkling crow's feet eyes

in an electric blue flicker flash of wings

how is it that we know we have just seen God?

Advance Review Copy

On visiting friends in Loughborough

for Malcolm

Once in a while I would find an hour to drive to Mount St Bernard Abbey, buy another piece of rippled blue-glazed stoneware turned by Brother Potter and spend some time in prayer.

The best of days, there would be sun inclined to take the form of risen and ascended dust,
when I would stay to wait and gaze,
and watch the other faithful,

who enter, quietly bang the chapel door,
dip holy water, cross themselves and bob a genuflect. Some stopped a second.
Others knelt, with hands folded, an age as the dust, drifting, came to rest on us in blessing.

Advance Review Copy

Some of our conversations

after Carrie Newcomer

Some of our conversations have become songs: the air that is essential silence humming comfortably beyond all sense, in sparer moments out of blue, a psalm for every consequence — delight, appeal, lament, contentment with a job well done,

a catch at martins tending urgent young,

angelic frequencies re-tuning all my worrying away at memories of awkward words — those sighs and groanings spun to lyrics in unfathomable tongues,

or a miracle of calming harmonies that, soothing, hush to pulsing lullaby — our songs that hold the light at close of day.

Advance Review Copy

Heartwood

HOSPITALITY

Come back with me to Tymawr, where I have found a spreading magnolia in the house of God —
the ideal secluded tree to hang a hammock, with two stout branches at the perfect height and a mossy cushion to rest my head.
Above, a lavish canopy of leaves might shelter me from sun and God willing showers, should I ever take the risk.

TWO LEYLANDII

This morning I had the strangest sense the two Leylandii beyond Our Lady's Orchard were about to wake, unfold their arms and shake their shaggy heads, unbend their knobbled knees, gird up their skirts, peck a parting kiss and stump off to their day jobs — or, contrariwise, were simply glad to squat merged in each others' congenial greenery.

Advance Review Copy

STATIONS OF THE CROSS

Fifteen tapped from all the trees tell the winding tale of inhumanity. Grief and fear the world's daily companions on this long route around the convent grounds. Just so.
The line separating good and evil passes right through every human heart.

The Leylandii stand too for Station 14
— the Cross of Inhospitality — minding all without a place to turn.
The end is close to where it all began.

THE STUMP

Even this mouldering stump may serve to lift up a crucifix — a small stone frieze.
Jesus is marked out through the camouflage of moss and weather by his hands, huge and welcoming.

AND THE DAMSONS

keep on cropping. Pail upon pail.
How on earth could one small tree bear such a heavy load of dark sharp-sweet tears?

Advance Review Copy

Advance Review Copy

Advance Review Copy

The next thing

Yesterday was misty.
I went running in the trees.
Today it is misty again —
beech leaves
showered everywhere, as though there were no tomorrows.
Now I can only do the next thing —
be kind, pay attention, pray, write a little, share
those poems that tell of reweaving the world.

Advance Review Copy

ENDNOTES

Malling Abbey, May 2011
Hortus conclusus — Latin, an enclosed garden.

Blythburgh
Clerestory — in church buildings, the upper level of the nave, rising above the rooflines of the lower aisles and featuring windows.

On his Cross
Chronos — Greek, the measured quantitative time of clocks and calendars.
Kairos — Greek, the qualitative moments when time stands still and the world stops.

Rewilding
The pine marten was reintroduced to Dartmoor in September 2024, and the first kits were born in June 2025.

Corff Crist
Corff Crist — the Body of Christ
Gwaed Crist — the Blood of Christ
yn y Gymraeg, hefyd — in Welsh, too

When a butterfly prophesies
The Welsh noun pilipala, butterfly, is wonderfully evocative of its flight.

Knit together
Your hands made me — Job 10.8a,11
Ganseys are hard-wearing, hand-knitted, woollen jumpers traditionally worn by fishermen around the British Isles. They are knit from a tough, fine wool of one colour, traditionally navy blue or cream. The fine gauge of the stitches makes dazzlingly intricate designs possible, with an immense range of patterns recorded around the coast.

Advance Review Copy

Some of our conversations
Some of our conversations have become songs — from "Carrie Newcomer: A Conversation with Music", On Being with Krista Tippett, 31 December 2015.

Heartwood
a spreading magnolia in the house of God — compare Psalm 52.8a, Common Worship
"The line separating good and evil passes not through states, nor between classes, nor between political parties either — but right through every human heart." — Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn, The Gulag Archipelago.

Advance Review Copy

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Many of these poems started life at Tymawr Convent, in the Wye Valley just south of Monmouth. Thank you, diolch yn fawr iawn to my beloved community there and to the other communities present in these pages. Also to my editor Matt Bryden (no relation!) and to all who read and commented on early and late drafts of these poems. Your support is immeasurably precious.

Versions of a number of poems have previously been published:
"All are welcome" as "Everyone welcome" in Conversations.
"Tymawr Chapel speaks" as "At Tymawr Convent", "Kilpeck Church" and "Blythburgh" in Theology.
"On his Cross" and "Knit together" in The Merton Journal.
"Many-storied" as "Writing on my hand" in The Christian Century.
Copyright © 2025 by The Christian Century. Reprinted by permission from the January 2025 issue of The Christian Century. christiancentury.org.
"When a butterfly prophesies" in Temenos Academy Review.
"Some of our conversations" in The Silken Twine, Black Ven Poets.
"Heartwood" in Advent Newsletter / Cylchlythyr Adfent, Tymawr Convent.

Advance Review Copy

Advance Review Copy

Now I can only do the next thing —
be kind, pay attention, pray, write a little, share
those poems that tell of reweaving the world.

LIFEBELTPRESS.CO.UK
9 781065 491101

LIFEBELT
POETRY